Harry was an amazing neighbor. He was always ready to lend a hand. I remember him helping J.W. and I take out a tree that had died. He also took a piece of a beautiful bush in his yard and helped J.W. plant it in place of the tree that had died. Harry and I would always chat when we were out working in our yards, lots of flower and veggie talks:) Evelyn his wife such a very sweet lady. We have such an emptiness in our hearts, we will dearly miss Harry. Evelyn anything we can do to help, please let us know.J.W. and Cheryl

Harry was a great neighbor. He was handy at everything. I found the way to get Harry's attention without calling him or ringing his doorbell. All I needed to do was to open my garage door. When it opened and I started doing something, Harry would stroll down his driveway and call out "Hey Kev, what are you working on?" I would tell him, and the next thing I knew, he was going back up his driveway to get the exact tool or material to help me. He had every tool imaginable and the materials needed for any project under the sun. One of his favorite tools was his chain saw. He was always at the ready to cut an old tree or to cut up a tree downed in a storm. He also loved splitting the wood. He took the hard job. While I loaded the wood on the splitter, he had his hand at the ready on the power level. When ready, he pushed the lever and let me know that he was exhausted doing this, but he would continue through all the sweat and pain to get the job done. He loved working in his yard and when he purchased the zero-turn mower, he was in the yard even more. Sometimes he would just drive up the road to talk to another neighbor. He loved his red sports car and could be seen tooling around the neighborhood with a big smile on his face as he passed you with the top down. Harry, you were a great neighbor and friend. Camilla and I will remember and think of you often. Evelyn, you know you can count on us whenever you need something. Of course, I can't see when your garage door is open to come over, so we will need to develop another method on non-verbal communication when working projects. Kevin and Camilla Conlon

Teresa James lit a candle in honor of Harry .

When someone we have loved for a very long time leaves us, it is so deeply sad and yet, we must treasure having had such a wonderful person along on our journey, feel so very blessed. At times like this, we all have memories and feelings that we may not even realize we had inside of us. Remembering "Dad" as I have always called him, in a scene from over 30 years ago, I could only smile (tears too) and feel a deep sense of gratitude. Back then, as a 20 year old struggling college student with a broken car, having only just met him, he came outside to help me to figure it all out, actually fix that "bucket of bolts" himself and I was back on the road. He proceeded to help me/us with so many things, as a good "dad" would do, for so many more years to come. He was always there with a steadfast problem solving mind, but he was so gentle and kind. He was deeply proud and overjoyed to eventually become "granddad." He held our babies with such love and pure joy, was always there to be supportive as we grew as adults and parents. As his grandchildren grew to be fine young people, that made his heart smile. I have described him as a quietly brilliant man who had a stellar career with NASA--from Moon Shot to so many contemporary space projects to which he would lend his amazing brain and skills to accomplish along his career, he truly made a mark on history. But, his greatest mark and his greatest joy was his family. He adored his wonderful wife Evelyn, his children and grandchildren. He lived in a way that showed us all what it truly means to be a great man and father. He was simply "The best!" I am so honored to have known him, been cared for by him and to have had the greatest granddad anyone could hope for in our children's lives. My love and support to Evelyn (mom) and all of the Culver family. Dad's love will live forever in all of our hearts. His legacy will be honored by all of us who he touched so deeply. He will be greatly missed. With love and fond memories, Teresa James
